EXTERNAL SUPPORT

PENDING:

The Duke Endowment 5/1/23 – 6/30/28
Creation and Use of a Clergy Health and Wellbeing Databank to Inform Programs, Policies, and Resource Allocation Decisions for Clergy $3.0 million over 5 years
Role: Principal Investigator

PRESENT:

The Duke Endowment 10/1/21 – 3/31/23
To Heal the Wounded Soul $1.5 million over 1.5 years
 This project will design and hold nine retreats, with three retreats each for each cohort of clergy. Two cohorts will be Black Wesleyan pastors, and one cohort will be Latinx, Native American, Asian American, and Black pastors from North and South Carolina. The retreat content will be informed by positive mental health research and principles and will attend closely to culture. The project also includes a systems-level intervention to improve the community referrals pastors make for congregants, to both benefit congregants and potentially decrease time and stress burdens on clergy. A survey and focus group study will come alongside the retreats for knowledge generation and evaluation.
Role: Principal Investigator (with David Emmanuel Goatley, multiple PI)

The Duke Endowment 7/1/18 – 6/30/23
Selah Stress Reduction Intervention Study $2.1 million over 4 years
 This study will pilot four stress reduction interventions tailored to clergy. The two or three interventions found most acceptable by clergy will be brought forward to a clinical trial with a randomly assigned waitlist control. The primary outcomes are self-reported stress symptoms and heart rate variability; positive mental health will be explored as a moderator and outcome.
Role: Principal Investigator (with Carl Weisner, multiple PI)

The Duke Endowment 7/1/18 – 6/30/23
Longitudinal, mixed-methods study of clergy well-being $1.25 million over 5 years
 This study aims to determine longitudinal relationships between dimensions of physical health and physical illness, mental health and mental illness, and spiritual well-being and struggle, among clergy in the context in which they work. Two additional waves of the clergy health panel survey will be conducted and data will be combined with the first 11 years of data collection. In addition, rapid response studies will be conducted in response to new ideas. Findings will be disseminated to academic and clergy occupational audiences.

The Seminary to Ministry Study

$2.5 million over 5 years

The Seminary to Ministry Study is a longitudinal mixed methods study of one graduating and three entering classes of Duke Divinity students. This study will collect a variety of social, psychological and contextual data on seminarians during their training and into the first several years of their careers. It aims to help both academic and professional audiences better understand the professional formation of divinity students.

Transforming and Sustaining: Wellbeing Practices for Teachers and Caregivers of Children

Using a case study methodology, we will identify innovative practices for promoting teacher well-being and preventing teacher burnout in high-performing schools that are both well-resourced and low in resources in Kenya, Cambodia, and Qatar. We will examine state policies and local educational structures that correlate with teacher well-being. We will also conduct a multinational literature synthesis on correlates of teacher burnout, well-being interventions, and the relationship between teacher well-being and student outcomes.

Strengthening Families during COVID-19: Building Togetherness and Hope

In this study, we will collaborate with community partners to adapt an evidence-based family strengthening intervention developed in the context of western Kenya, for families in Durham, North Carolina. The intervention will focus on family communication and emotions, with attention to the stressors currently experienced due to COVID-19. In addition, we will infuse positive emotions interventions to bring hope and gratitude and enhance family members' openness to ideas presented in the intervention.

GI Faculty Burnout & Purpose Study

In this mixed-methods study, guided by stress appraisal and burnout models, we will identify structural and intrapersonal sources of medical provider burnout and possible actions to reduce burnout. In addition, guided by positive mental health frameworks, we will identify areas of meaning, purpose and enjoyment and possible actions to promote those.

Sabbath Living Evaluation

Sabbath Living is an intervention designed to teach and encourage United Methodist clergy in North Carolina to set apart one day a week for spiritual and recreational activities. In this mixed-methods evaluation, we compared the positive mental health and spiritual well-being outcomes (primary outcomes), as well as depression and anxiety outcomes (secondary outcomes) between two groups of clergy: 1) clergy who attended a Sabbath Living workshop and proceed to engage in Sabbath-keeping, versus 2) clergy who attended a Sabbath Living workshop and did not go on to engage in Sabbath-keeping. We will also examined the potential explanatory pathway of social support.

Hepatitis C – Alcohol Reduction Treatment (Hep ART)

This study employed a randomized controlled trial of hepatitis C patients in three liver clinics to examine the impact of an integrated model of alcohol treatment. The integrated model included brief alcohol counseling from the patient’s hepatologist; co-locating addictions therapists in the liver clinic; and individual and group therapy that emphasizes the interplay between alcohol and liver health. The integrated model was compared against brief alcohol counseling from the patient’s hepatologist and referral to outside alcohol treatment.

Flourishing mental health in caregivers: A mixed methods study of religion and virtue across four countries and religious traditions

This interdisciplinary, cross-cultural study sought to understand pathways for sustaining flourishing mental health among caregivers of orphans living in four countries (India, Kenya, Ethiopia, and Cambodia) and of four religious traditions (Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, and Buddhism). This qualitative and quantitative study included interviews, surveys, and diaries. The findings aimed to advance theoretical concepts of stress, coping, and well-being; to inform the measurement of virtue; and to provide practical guidance on how caregivers in challenging contexts can flourish.

Longitudinal, mixed-methods study of clergy well-being

This study aimed to determine longitudinal relationships between dimensions of health. One focus was to identify the predictors of physical health and physical illness, mental health and mental illness, and spiritual well-being and struggle, among clergy in the context in which they work. The second focus was to pool the findings of all data sources of the Duke Clergy Health Initiative and disseminate those findings to academic and clergy audiences.

The Casual Effect of Effective Depression Treatment on HIV Outcomes in CNICS

The major goals were to characterize the frequency of adequate vs inadequate antidepressant treatment provided within HIV clinical care; to estimate the magnitude of the effect of antidepressant treatment, and specifically adequate antidepressant treatment, on HIV-related behavioral and health outcomes using state-of-the-art causal inference methods; and to assess whether the effect of adequate depression treatment on HIV outcomes differs for certain subgroups, such as those with greater depressive severity, concurrent anxiety, or problematic alcohol or drug use.
