

Request for Proposals: Global Health Research Resources

Application Deadline: December 14, 2020

The Duke Global Health Institute (DGHI) is pleased to offer small research support grants of $2000-$5000 each to DGHI faculty. These grants can be used for publication fees, hiring professionals (eg editors) for proposal development, analytical support, postdoc/RA assistance – a resource that will enhance an investigator’s competitiveness in finding external research funding.

Complete applications will include:

1. 1-page proposal describing the research question to be investigated, rationale for resources, and proposed plan.
2. 1-page detailed budget and justification for amount requested. (if you need assistance identifying resources, please contact Kelly Deal)
3. Applicant’s CV or NIH biosketch.

Applications are limited to one per investigator. Award funds may be used for services provided by the identified resource only - any other expenses required for the proposed project must be supported by other funding sources, and those funding sources should be identified in the application. Given current spending and travel restrictions at Duke, expenses must be approved by your Department. If possible, please discuss your budget with appropriate Department personnel before submitting; we will be confirming approval before an award can be made.

Applications should emphasize the prospects for longer-term external research funding support and the relationship of the proposal to DGHI’s Priority Locations or research around equity, diversity and inclusion (eg decolonizing global health, equal access to data for collaborators).

Eligibility: Proposals must be submitted by DGHI Faculty. Proposals from junior faculty and those who have never received a DGHI grant will be given priority in review.

Proposal due dates: December 14, 2020
Funding award dates: January 4, 2021
